In 1875 workers at an English aquarium noticed something strange. Lumpfish kept disappearing from a tank. Early one morning a worker found that an octopus had been eating the fish. Each night the octopus had been escaping from a nearby tank and slithering over to the lumpfish tank. After its midnight snack, the octopus would return to its own tank.

The brain of the octopus is much larger than the brains of most other creatures without backbones. An octopus can solve problems quickly. Later, it can recall the solutions. It can find its way through a maze and take apart machines. Divers report that the creatures often seem curious. Sometimes they even seem to play. With an octopus, there's never a dull moment!

Which statement best describes the central idea of the passage?

1. Octopuses are curious creatures.
2. Octopuses have relatively large brains.
3. Octopuses in captivity can cause problems.
4. Octopuses are surprisingly intelligent creatures.

2. She wants to wear shoes that are too small.
3. She cannot find her shoelaces.
4. She is going to be late for school.

104. Read the passage and the chart.Who Goes There?

Animal tracks can be seen anywhere—from backyards to hiking trails. We can figure out which animal left them by looking carefully. Often, animals that are related will have tracks that look like one another. For example, cat tracks look a lot like those of the bobcat. Scientists look at certain parts of tracks to see which animal left them. They often check the shape and size of tracks. They count the toes on the front and back feet. Some types of tracks show claws. Others do not. Animals with hooves leave very different tracks than those without.

What would show that some tracks were left by a dog instead of a cat?

1. the number of toes
2. the number of tracks
3. the shape of the toes
4. the claws in the tracks

105. Read the poem.

Little brook! Little brook!
You have such a happy look—
Such a very merry manner, as you swerve and curve and crook—
And your ripples, one and one,
Reach each other's hands and run
Like laughing little children in the sun!

(from "The Brook-Song" by James Whitcomb Riley)

What does the author most likely think about the brook?

1. It has waves that look like fingers.
2. It is pleasant and lovely to look at.

141. Read the passage.

Many people have either a dog or a cat as a pet. Some people love dogs, but other people like cats. Dogs are known as "man's best friend," and many dogs are eager to please. But dogs can be wild and noisy, and they need a lot of care. You have to walk dogs outside twice a day. Cats are much easier to care for. They do not need much space. Plus, cats are sweet and playful. A cat is warm and soft when it sits on your lap and starts purring. Unlike a dog, a cat could never jump up and knock you over.

What does the writer believe about dogs and cats?

1. Cats are more fun than dogs.
2. Cats are better pets than dogs.
3. Dogs and cats are a lot of work.
4. Dogs are more popular than cats.

142. This question has two parts. Read the passage. Then answer Part A and Part B.

Many kids play computer games. The games can be exciting. To play them, you need to be able to think quickly. However, you cannot be friends with your computer. When the game is over, the fun is over. When you turn it off, your computer doesn't think about you. When you play a board game with a friend, you can tell jokes and talk about things. After the game is over, you can keep talking together. Instead of turning off the way a computer does, a friend stays and you can decide to do something else together. If a friend invites you to play a board game, you should say yes.

Part A

What is the main idea of the passage?

1. Computer games teach kids many new skills.
2. Board games help kids spend time with friends.
3. Kids enjoy computer games more than board games.

Part B

Which sentence from the passage best supports the correct answer from Part A?
